

Reflections of Cueing Parents: A New NCSA Publication!

April 17, 2007 - The National Cued Speech Association is pleased to announce the release of Reflections of Cueing Parents, a booklet that contains eight inspiring stories written by cueing parents, for parents and professionals in the field of deafness.

Cued Speech is a visual communication system that uses handshapes, hand placements and hand movements combined with mouth movements to clearly show the stream of consonants and vowels that represent words in spoken languages.

Edited by Amy Ruberl, M.E.D., the eight stories capture the perspectives of a native deaf adult cueing parent with deaf twins, a parent who learned about Cued Speech when their child was ten years old and severely language-delayed, and a mother with a deaf child who has processing disorders that complicate his language development. These and the other stories in the booklet provide hope and inspiration to readers.

If you've ever wanted to know what parents went through when learning their child was deaf and how they came across Cued Speech, this is the booklet for you! Contact info@cuedspeech.org for your free copy today!

###

The National Cued Speech Association champions effective communication, language development and literacy through the use of Cued Speech. For more information visit www.cuedspeech.org or call 800.459.3529.